I. PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

The purpose of S. 375, the Payment Integrity Information Act of 2019, is to improve efforts to identify and reduce Government-wide improper payments. The bill does this by codifying, updating, and improving previous improper payments laws.¹

¹On June 13, 2018, the Committee approved S. 2948, Payment Integrity Information Act of 2018. That bill is substantially similar to S. 375. Accordingly, this committee report is in large part a reproduction of Chairman Johnson's committee report for S. 2948, S. Rep. No. 115-445.

II. BACKGROUND AND THE NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Improper payments are “any payment that should not have been made or that was made in an incorrect amount.”² In fiscal year (FY) 2017, the Government Accountability Office (GAO) estimated that Government-wide Federal improper payments totaled $141 billion dollars.³

Since 2002, Congress has passed piecemeal bills that, while incrementally improving statutory authorities, are not well coordinated. The foundation of improper payments legislation is the Improper Payments Information Act of 2002 (IPIA), which required Federal agencies to identify, prevent, and report improper payments. IPIA required Federal agencies to report on their actions to reduce improper payments on all programs or activities that exceed ten million dollars.⁴ IPIA also established definitions for “payment” and “improper payment.”⁵ Later in 2002, Congress passed the Recovery Audit Act of 2002, which required agencies that enter into contracts exceeding five hundred million dollars to conduct proper oversight of contractor payments and employ recovery audits.⁶

As IPIA reporting requirements took effect, the number of agency programs that reported expanded, increasing the total amount of improper payments and the Government-wide improper payment rate from $45 billion in FY2004 to $108 billion in FY2012.⁷ In 2006, GAO recommended that Congress revise and expand IPIA to better reduce improper payments.⁸

In 2010, Congress responded to GAO’s recommendation by passing the Improper Payments Elimination and Recovery Act of 2010 (IPERA). IPERA defines in more detail the types of risk assessments agencies must complete. IPERA provides a detailed description of “significant” improper payments, which was previously up to agencies’ discretion. While IPERA made positive changes to improper payments law, GAO identified additional challenges requiring legislation.⁹

Two years later Congress passed the Improper Payments Elimination and Recovery Improvement Act of 2012 (IPERIA).¹⁰ In addition to refining definitions and reporting requirements, IPERIA requires the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) Director to identify a list of high-priority Federal programs for greater levels of oversight by the agencies.¹¹ IPERIA also codifies the Do Not Pay Initiative.¹² The Do Not Pay Initiative requires agencies to review a list of databases to verify the validity of a payment or award they are about to authorize.¹³ To carry out the Do Not Pay Initiative, the Treasury Department created the Do Not Pay Business Center to be a centralized analytics service center to help agencies comply with IPERIA.¹⁴

In 2015, Congress passed the Fraud Reduction and Data Analytics Act of 2015 to require the OMB Director and the Comptroller General of the United States to establish guidelines for agencies to follow based on leading practices identified by GAO.¹⁵ The bill required agencies to follow best practices established by GAO that focus on collecting and analyzing data from reporting mechanisms, similar to the Do Not Pay Business Center, to better prevent improper payments before they happen.¹⁶

While reviewing the history of improper payments legislation, the Committee found that IPIA, the Recovery Audit Act of 2002, IPERA, IPERIA, and the Fraud Reduction and Data Analytics Act of 2015 are not sufficiently coordinated. Under current law, statutory requirements concerning Federal improper payments are scattered throughout the U.S. Code, and some of these statutory requirements were not incorporated into the U.S. Code as positive law.¹⁷ These statutes, when taken in sum, lack sufficient coherence, leaving certain aspects up to agency interpretation. In order to improve the coherence of improper payments laws and to improve agency compliance, S. 375 repeals the previous improper payments laws and combines the language of each into a single new subchapter of the U.S. Code. The bill omits areas of duplication, and improves and updates areas that warrant attention.

The Committee worked closely with the GAO, the Council of the Inspectors General on Integrity and Efficiency, and OMB on the legislation and received letters of support from the Project on Government Oversight, Americans for Tax Reform, FreedomWorks, National Taxpayers Union, Taxpayers for Common Sense, and the Taxpayers Protection Alliance.¹⁸

III. LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

IV. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF THE BILL, AS REPORTED

Section 1. Short title

This section establishes the short title of the bill as the Payment Integrity Information Act of 2018.

Section 2. Improper payments

This section moves several existing improper payments statutes to one place in the code. New Subchapter IV of Chapter 33 of Title 31 now houses the Improper Payments Information Act of 2002, the Improper Payments Elimination and Recovery Act of 2010, the Improper Payments Elimination and Recovery Improvement Act of 2012, and the Fraud Reduction and Data Analytics Act of 2015. This section also makes minor updates to these existing law as described below.

Section 3352 is a rewrite of IPERA with some new subsections and new definitions. A definition of the term “scope” is included to explicitly explain all the factors agencies should consider when gauging the susceptibility to improper payments.

Subsection (c) of 3352 integrates improper payment guidance from OMB Memorandum M–15–02. This guidance explains how insufficient documentation errors are to be classified as an improper payment. Incorporating this memorandum into section 3352 strengthens the definition of the term improper payment.

Subsection (c) of 3353 is a new addition that gives OMB the option to create one or more pilot programs to test potential accountability measures, incentives, and consequences for compliance and the elimination of improper payments.

Section 3354 establishes the Do Not Pay Initiative, which was originally authorized in IPERIA. Subsection (e) adds to the Do Not Pay system a requirement that Social Security increase the frequency of access to the Death Master File to daily, and identify improved methods for determining improper payments due to death of the recipient.

Section 3355 includes requirements of IPERIA, which was in 31 U.S.C. 3301 note, that requires the Director of OMB to determine the rate of improper payments and to set targets for recovering improper payments.

Section 3356 provides the Director of OMB the authority to modify and update any guidance required by the legislation.

Section 3357 is the Fraud Reduction Data Analytics Act of 2015, with the only change to law being that OMB may update its guidance as needed.

Section 3358 establishes a new working group that will enable Federal agencies to collaborate with each other and non-Federal partners, such as state governments. The purpose of this addition is to aide in developing strategies to address root causes and driving factors of improper payments, such as fraud and eligibility determinations in state-managed federal benefits programs.

Section 3. Repeals

This section repeals the existing improper payments statutes that are scattered throughout the U.S. Code, and within notes of the U.S. Code, that section 2 reconstitutes within a new Subchapter of Title 31, and makes necessary conforming edits. Repealed statutes include the Improper Payments Information Act of 2002, the Improper Payments Elimination and Recovery Act of 2010, the Improper Payments Elimination and Recovery Improvement Act of 2012, and the Fraud Reduction and Data Analytics Act of 2015.

V. EVALUATION OF REGULATORY IMPACT

Pursuant to the requirements of paragraph 11(b) of rule XXVI of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the Committee has considered the regulatory impact of this bill and determined that the bill will have no regulatory impact within the meaning of the rules. The Committee agrees with the Congressional Budget Office's statement that the bill contains no intergovernmental or private-sector mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA) and would impose no costs on state, local, or tribal governments.

The bill would

- Direct federal agencies to undertake numerous activities designed to reduce improper payments

Estimated budgetary effects would primarily stem from

- Potential administrative activities of federal employees
- Audits of selected programs or activities

Areas of significant uncertainty include

- How this legislation would build on and interact with current law, policy, and practice of the federal government
- Effectiveness of potential new program integrity initiatives

Bill summary

S. 375 would direct federal agencies to undertake numerous activities designed to reduce improper payments. Specifically, agencies would be required to identify and report annually on programs that are susceptible to improper payments. Agencies also would need to estimate the magnitude of improper payments and report to their inspectors general and the OMB Director on progress. S. 375 also would require agencies to implement recovery audits if they would be cost-effective for any program or activity that spends more than $1 million annually.

Estimated federal cost

Enacting S. 375 could affect direct spending and revenues; therefore, pay-as-you-go procedures apply. However, CBO cannot estimate the magnitude or the direction of those effects. S. 375 also could affect spending subject to appropriation, but CBO also cannot determine the potential change in discretionary spending that would result from implementing the bill.

Background and current law

Within government programs, an improper payment is generally defined as “any payment that should not have been made or that was made in an incorrect amount under statutory, contractual, administrative, or other legally applicable requirements. In addition, improper payments include payments with insufficient documentation to determine if the payment was proper.”¹ Effectively, improper payments include fraud, payments that arise from paperwork errors (such as accidental transposition of numbers in a form), and from design elements that make the program susceptible to improper payments.²

Over the past two decades, many laws have been enacted to curtail improper payments, including the Improper Payments Information Act of 2002, the Improper Payments Elimination and Recovery Act of 2010, the Improper Payments Elimination and Recovery Improvement Act of 2012, and the Fraud Reduction and Data Analytics Act of 2015.

According to guidance from the Office of Management and Budget (OMB), federal agencies already must estimate the magnitude of improper payments for many programs, even though it can be difficult.³ In addition, the Government Accountability Office (GAO), maintains a list of programs at high risk for improper payments.⁴

Basis of estimate

Under recovery audits, third-party contractors identify overpayments and underpayments in federal programs. Those contractors may be paid from contingency fees where the contractor receives a percentage of any identified improper payments, or compensated using a set fee.

For example, the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS) currently conducts recovery audits for Medicare's fee-for-service program. Contractors are paid on a contingency basis, generally between 9 percent and 12 percent of the improper payments they identify. Over fiscal years 2013 through 2016, the current Medicare recovery audit contractor (RAC) program returned approximately $5 billion to the Medicare Trust Funds—about 0.2 percent of Medicare spending for that same period.⁵

Although recovery audits could be used effectively to identify underpayments and to recover overpayments in other programs, CBO cannot estimate the budgetary effects of this provision for several reasons:

- Information about the number of agencies that might use recovery audits under S. 375 and the amount of federal spending or collections that might result is difficult to find. Agencies can use such audits under current law; their failure to do so might indicate that they do not expect the use of contract auditors to be useful or cost-effective.
- The bill's standard for cost-effectiveness of recovery audits would depend, in part, on how agencies structured payments to contractors. As a result, estimating the net budgetary effect of recovery audits or their budgetary effects is difficult.
- For programs that receive annual appropriations, recovering overpayments might not result in net savings, especially if agencies could spend the recovered funds without subsequent appropriation action. Future appropriations would need to be reduced to realize any reduction in spending.

In addition, CBO cannot determine whether CMS would be able to continue to operate its current RAC program, which differs from the program outlined in the bill in several aspects. If the program changed to meet the requirements of S. 375, Medicare recoveries of improper payments could be larger or smaller than under CBO's current baseline projections. CBO cannot estimate the direction or magnitude of those effects on direct spending.

Finally, the bill also would require federal agencies to undertake several new or modified activities that CBO expects could require new administrative resources. Because such spending is generally subject to appropriation, S. 375 would increase the amount of discretionary funding that agencies require. However, CBO cannot determine how the bill might affect such spending. Agencies could redirect current spending on activities designed to reduce improper payments to fulfill the requirements of S. 375 but those resources might not be sufficient to meet the bill's requirements.

Uncertainty

CBO cannot determine whether the activities mandated by section (a), Identification of Susceptible Programs and Activities, or section (b), Improving the Determination of Improper Payments, would materially affect the ability of federal agencies to identify, prevent, and recover improper payments relative to what they can already do. For example, as noted above, GAO already identifies high-risk programs but how the identification mandated by S. 375 would differ from GAO's is unclear. Similarly, agencies are now required to identify improper payments within the programs they administer and CBO cannot determine whether the changes mandated by S. 375 would improve on current processes. Because of those uncertainties CBO cannot determine how federal spending might change if the activities required under S. 375 were implemented.

Increasing the number of employees focused on preventing and recovering such payments could reduce improper payments. Using information from the Office of Personnel Management, CBO estimates that approximately 81,500 current federal workers engage in activities related to obligating, apportioning, or otherwise managing federal funds. Based on average salary and benefits, CBO estimates that compensation for those workers totals more than $8 billion annually. If the number of staff devoted to preventing improper payments were increased by 1 percent (about 30 employees) costs would increase by more than $80 million annually, assuming appropriation of the estimated amounts. Likewise, a 5 percent increase in staffing would cost more than $400 million annually and add more than 4,000 new employees throughout the government. However, S. 375 would neither authorize nor appropriate funding for agencies to hire additional personnel. Without knowing how many staff might be hired to implement the legislation, CBO cannot estimate how the number or magnitude of improper payments that might be affected.

Pay-As-You-Go considerations

The Statutory Pay-As-You-Go Act of 2010 establishes budget-reporting and enforcement procedures for legislation affecting direct spending or revenues. Enacting S. 375 could affect direct spending; therefore, pay-as-you-go procedures apply. However, CBO cannot estimate the magnitude or the direction of those effects.

Increase in long-term deficits

Although CBO cannot determine the effects of S. 375, enacting the bill probably would not increase net direct spending or on-budget deficits in any of the four consecutive 10-year periods beginning in 2030.
