

refined petroleum products to consumers in the greater Spokane area; and (3) transportation of military jet fuel to Fairchild Air Force Base in Spokane. The pipeline now supplies approximately 34 percent of all consumer gasoline and diesel fuel to the Spokane market, 100 percent of the military jet fuel to the Fairchild Air Force Base, and 100 percent of the commercial jet fuel to the Grant County Airport, which supports the Boeing Aircraft and the Japan Air Lines pilot test programs.

The Proposed Action would allow continued use of the existing rights-of-way, with additional safety improvements designed to improve the maintenance of the pipe, the detection of leaks and ruptures, should they occur, and the containment of any product spills. These safety improvements include: (1) Hydrostatic pressure testing every 10 years to identify weak place in the pipeline; (2) instrumented "smart pig" testing every 10 years to detect areas of corrosion that might lead to leakage or rupture; (3) monthly "shut-in" testing to detect low volume leakage; (4) close interval survey of cathodic protection every 10 years; and (5) better, all-weather, spill contingency planning.

The No Action alternative would deny renewal of the rights-of-way. Petroleum products would thus have to reach the Spokane area markets through alternate modes of transportation.

Because the response to market vacuum resulting from this alternative would be market-driven, it is difficult to predict. Most likely, for the first six months following cessation of pipeline service from Missoula, Montana, product would be supplied by truck from Missoula and from Pasco, Washington; by rail car from Seattle, Washington, or Portland, Oregon; and by a slight increase in flow in the Chevron pipeline from Pasco to Spokane. In the six month to four year period, it is likely that flow in the Chevron pipeline would increase and that shipment by barge would replace shipment by rail, thus increasing traffic on the Columbia River from Portland to Pasco.

A Modified Existing Route Alternative would use the safety improvements identified in the proposed action. It would also re-route the pipeline around five identified sensitive areas in order to reduce (1) the chance of rupture due to stream scour and/or ground movement during earthquakes and (2) the exposure of people, cultural and aquatic resources, and other sensitive receptors in those areas to the adverse effects of petroleum products. This alternative would add four remote control block valves and two new check valves, designed to reduce the volume of product spilled by drain-down in the event of rupture.
