Centers for Disease Control and Prevention

National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health; Meeting

The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) announces the following meeting:

Name: Setting a National Occupational Research Agenda.

Time and Date: 9:30 a.m.-5:00 p.m., November 30, 1995.

Place: Hubert H. Humphrey Building, Room 800, 200 Independence Avenue, SW, Washington, DC 20201.

Status: Open to the public, limited only by the space available. The room accommodates approximately 100 people.

Purpose: NIOSH seeks input into the development of a national agenda for occupational safety and health research for the next decade. The agenda will assist NIOSH and other organizations and individual scientists in the public and private sectors to coordinate research activities and target the highest scientific priorities for preventing work injuries and illnesses in the United States.

The tentative agenda of the meeting includes: (1) An initial discussion list of possible items for the national research agenda; (2) proposed criteria for establishing research priorities; and, (3) the proposed public process for developing the research agenda. The remainder of the meeting will provide interested parties with the opportunity to comment and make recommendations on research priorities, criteria, and the process. Research priorities for consideration include health effects, hazardous exposures, work environments, industries, occupations, and populations associated with significant occupational disease, injury, disability, fatalities, or topics of growing importance in the future.

Persons interested in presenting oral comments during the meeting will be limited to five minutes to allow a maximum number of presentations. Presenters are encouraged to provide written comments to accompany their oral presentations. Participants as well as persons who cannot attend are encouraged to send written comments as indicated below.

Matters to be Discussed: As the lead federal health agency for research into the causes and prevention of work injuries and diseases, NIOSH has a responsibility to continually assess the state of existing knowledge and define future research needs and priorities. The development of a national research agenda will assist NIOSH and the occupational safety and health research community in establishing priorities and targeting some of the scientific needs of the next decade that offer the greatest potential for advancing the safety and health of workers. Establishing these priorities is especially important in light of increasing fiscal constraints on occupational safety and health research in both the public and private sectors. The agenda is intended to serve decision-makers and scientists working throughout the field, employed in government, corporate, labor, university, and private research programs.

NIOSH has developed a discussion list of possible items for the national research agenda. A small group of scientists reviewed a wide array of information ranging from the scope of occupational safety and health problems to future employment projections. The results of a scientific agenda-setting process recently completed in the United Kingdom were also considered. In addition, the group agreed on the scope of agenda items it would propose. For example, it decided that a category such as "occupational lung diseases" would be too inclusive to serve as a research priority, that items of this breadth would result in an agenda encompassing the field rather than providing decision-makers and scientists with focused direction to meet some of the greatest needs and opportunities for prevention. The group ultimately listed approximately 50 items:
