

exports were about 28 Bcf to seven countries. In 2021, U.S. LNG exports reached a record high of about 3,561 Bcf to 45 countries, and LNG exports accounted for 54% of total U.S. natural gas exports.”¹

This expansion of LNG demand is expected to continue in the near term and brings with it additional safety challenges which must be understood and remedied to mitigate safety impacts and potential environmental damage from releases and incidents. Therefore, LNG transportation research will examine regulatory requirements and standards incorporated into the Code of Federal Regulations (CFR) for LNG and performance gap analyses so as to keep pace with the growing demand to export LNG. In addition, future research outputs must consider LNG’s status as an alternate transportation fuel for multiple modes of transportation particularly as operators transition from conventional oil-based fuels to LNG for marine vessels in order to reduce air pollution.

To this end, PHMSA hopes to discuss and receive public feedback in four areas: (1) LNG facility design and construction, including process, piping, and control system design; process hazard analysis; vapor handling; structural members; and construction testing requirements; (2) LNG facility siting, including passive and active protection and potential safety gaps in 49 CFR 193 and industry technical standards; (3) LNG facility fire protection system design, including firewater system design, fire and gas detection technology, emergency shutdown systems, and hazard controls; and (4) LNG operation and maintenance, including plans and procedures (best practices), safe work practices, human factors, incident investigation and reporting, reporting requirements, inspection and testing, maintenance and repairs—including fugitive and vented methane emissions mitigation, corrosion protection, and personnel protection.

II. Public Meeting and Forum Details and Agenda

The virtual meeting and forum will take place November 15 and 16, 2022. The morning of the first day of the virtual public meeting will include a general session with panel discussions among government, industry, research consortiums, and environmental advocacy stakeholders on LNG facility safety R&D research topics. The Title: General Reporting and Recordkeeping Requirements by Savings Associations.

OMB Control No.: 1557–0266.

Type of Review: Regular review.

Abstract: Federal savings associations must comply with the following regulations, which require them to establish prudent internal controls, so that examiners will have an accurate picture of the savings associations’ performance and condition:

- 12 CFR 144.8 (communications between members of a Federal mutual savings association);
- 12 CFR 163.47(e) (pension plans—records); and
- 12 CFR 163.76(c) (offers and sales of securities at an office of a Federal savings association—form of certification).

Federal savings associations use the required reports and records for internal management control purposes, and examiners use them to determine whether savings associations are being operated safely, soundly, and in compliance with regulations. Without these reporting and recordkeeping requirements, it would be difficult for Federal savings associations to establish prudent internal controls and would limit the ability of examiners to determine the accurate performance and condition of Federal savings associations.
