SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: In 2021, the White House identified a priority goal to reduce military and veteran suicide by advancing evidence-based approaches to improve Lethal Means Safety (LMS). This priority goal focuses on increasing time and space between a person in crisis and their access to lethal means, including firearms, medications, ligature points, and other lethal objects. No systematic evidence currently exists on how to best integrate effective education about lethal means safety into early military career training settings to ensure maximum receptiveness and subsequent adoption of safe storage practices. This project directly addresses DoDI 6400.09, DoD Policy on Integrated Primary Prevention of Self-Directed Harm and Prohibited Abuse or Harm (2020), which outlines a plan for a holistic prevention system that includes data-driven strategies. The purpose of the study is to conduct a needs assessment to determine the optimal approach for encouraging greater adoption of LMS within the military culture. The goal is to encourage Service members to store firearms securely, in a way that avoids misuse, accidents, self-inflicted injuries, and suicide. Focus groups will be conducted to help collect information that allows the DoD to understand when, where, and how Service members are introduced to principles of lethal means safety, particularly around safe handling of firearms, and to identify potential opportunities to capitalize on existing training and safety practices to enhance adoption of safe storage practices. This study is being conducted by Peraton, a DoD contractor, and is being sponsored by the Defense Suicide Prevention Office, in partnership with the Defense Personnel Assessment Center. Peraton will conduct up to 34 focus groups or key informant interviews, with up to 340 Service members and civilian support personnel, across all Services. The study findings will help inform DoD and the Service level plans to encourage greater adoption of lethal means safety practices among Service members by seamlessly inculcating education about the importance of lethal means safety within early military career training. Introducing these concepts early in Service members’ careers aims to enhance receptiveness and adoption of lethal means safety practices that can contribute to reduced injuries and deaths including suicides, accidents, unauthorized use, and domestic violence.
