

- Information on input, data sources and parameters for the exposure scenarios for considering LBP regulations, including: the frequency and characteristics of renovations, maintenance activities, paint flaking and deterioration, and other scenarios that result in the generation of dust-lead from lead in paint below 0.5% and 1 mg/cm²; uncertainty due to other sources of dust lead aside from lead in paint; and data for characterizing the direct ingestion pathway from lead in paint below 0.5% and 1 mg/cm², including quantitative measures of ingestion and exposure (duration, frequency, paint chip characteristics);

- Empirical data that provides paint density for different mass fractions of LBP, and other information to assist in the possible development of a conversion equation between the two units used to define LBP (one definition being in milligrams per square centimeter, and the other a percentage by weight), as well as information on confounding considerations that might make such a conversion unsupported;

- Consideration of LBP metrics under varied field conditions such as the following: lead detection/measurement technologies used in the laboratory and in the field; technical insights and limitations to extending XRF “thresholds” (analogous to reporting limits) to or below 0.5 mg/cm², if any; performance of XRFs on layers of differing concentrations of lead in paint, measuring through encapsulants, and on a single layer of new paint; implications of material underlying paint (e.g., old paint layers, plaster, metal, and concrete) on the reliability of lead detection estimates; and capabilities and limitations of alternative lead detection technologies;

- Considerations for comparing rhodizonate-based and other lead test kit results to other technology results, especially for lower levels of lead in paint;

- Consideration of how the distribution of lead in paint in U.S. housing affects the programmatic implications and estimates of health benefits of a lower LBP definition; and

- Consideration of any medical evidence that quantitatively supports the imposition of a lower level of lead in defining LBP.

D. How are EPA and HUD seeking public input?

Through this Federal Register document, EPA and HUD are announcing the intention to have a virtual public workshop on October 17 and 18, 2023, to hear stakeholder perspectives on specific topics related to detection of and exposure to potential lead hazards from existing residential paint using lower levels of lead than in the current definition of LBP. In addition to the presentations discussed previously, the workshop will include several audience question and answer segments as another means of hearing stakeholder perspectives. In addition, EPA and HUD are seeking abstracts from potential presenters.

E. How can I access information about the meeting or submit an abstract for consideration?

Information about this meeting is available at <https://www.epa.gov/lead/2023-lead-based-paint-technical-workshop> and in the docket for this meeting, identified by docket ID number EPA-HQ-OPPT-2023-0351, at <https://www.regulations.gov>.

The agenda and instructions for registration and for submitting abstracts for this meeting will be added to the EPA website and public docket established for this meeting at <https://www.regulations.gov>; docket ID number EPA-HQ-OPPT-2023-0351.
