SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

I. Abstract

The U.S. Census Bureau plans to request OMB approval for a three-year period for a new Generic Information Collection to conduct a series of studies to research and evaluate how to improve data collection activities for 2030 Census programs at the Census Bureau. In addition, the Census Bureau developed recommendations from lessons learned from previous censuses and received suggestions from stakeholders, focus groups, and results of earlier research studies, on updating address databases and other datasets used to plan and conduct larger tests and the 2030 Census itself. Under this Generic Information Collection, the Census Bureau also plans to test implementing some of those recommendations and suggestions. These studies and updates will explore how the Census Bureau can improve efficiency, data quality, and response rates and reduce respondent burden in future census and survey tests, operations, evaluations, experiments, and database updates. Having this Generic Information Collection will also provide the quick turn-around necessary for conducting unplanned tests and updates as well as unanticipated collections in response to disasters declared at the international, national, regional, or state level that could have a major impact on the development and planning of Census Bureau operations. For example, the Census Bureau may need to seek help from umbrella organizations for Group Quarters or Transitory Locations to provide address lists for emergency and transitional shelters during natural disasters.

Because this information collection will operate as a generic clearance, the estimated number of respondents and annual reporting hours requested cover both the known and yet to be determined tests and updates. A generic clearance is needed for these tests, evaluations, and database -updates because the exact number and explicit details of each test, evaluation, or update to be performed is yet to be determined. Once information collection plans are defined, they will be submitted on an individual basis to keep OMB informed as these tests, evaluations, updates progress.

For example, in one group of tests that are already being planned, the Census Bureau intends to test the use of new and improved data collection techniques for self-response and interviewer data-collection tasks surrounding and following the ongoing census and survey operations. Tests may also involve frame update tasks surrounding and following those same operations. These tests and other research and evaluation may cover the following: developing alternative enumeration or follow-up questionnaires; resolving usability issues; conducting interviews or debriefings; and non-English language training and interviews. For instance, the Census Bureau has an ongoing and iterative program that uses nationally representative samples and that plans for two more iterations by the end of 2027. To study enumeration, the Census Bureau may conduct the enumeration directly with a household member or knowledgeable respondent. The questions asked in these studies will be typical census or survey and related questions, along with potential attitudinal and satisfaction debriefing questions.

In addition, the Census Bureau plans to implement some recommendations from small-scale testing and stakeholder input to adjust and improve how it conducts support activities for the development of 2030 Census operations. An example might be having universities, hospital systems, and federal, state, and local agencies compile up-to-date names, addresses, and points of contact for group quarters and transitory locations.

The Census Bureau roughly estimates that, during the three-year period of this clearance, two currently planned tests will go to 216,000 respondents a piece (70,000 burden hours each); four potential experiments/tests on Group Quarters will average 50–60 respondents (an average of 15–20 burden hours) and as-yet unknown tests, evaluations, or database updates might go to 25,000 to 37,500 respondents (7,300 to 10,000 burden hours). In addition, the Census Bureau might have to collect information from 30,000 to 55,000 respondents (5,000 to 9,000 burden hours) in response to declared disasters.

II. Method of Collection

The information will be collected through observations, self-response (including but not limited to internet and paper forms), in-person interviews, and/or telephone interviews.
