Abstract of Information Available

Based on the information available, human remains representing, at least, one individual has been reasonably identified. The 2,036 associated funerary objects are beads, pottery, faunal remains, botanical remains, charcoal, soil, floatation materials, and unidentified materials. Lake Hole Burial Cave (40JN159), located in Johnson County, Tennessee, was the site of protohistoric Cherokee cave burials, dated between 1550–1650 CE, that were discovered and looted by grave robbers in the spring of 1990. Nine men were prosecuted under the Archaeological Resources Protection Act (ARPA) and a minimum number of 100 individuals were recovered. Afterwards the Cherokee National Forest installed a locked gate on the cave entrance, but on October 16, 2006, two men entered the cave illegally and disturbed two more individual burials. Although the human remains from Lake Hole Burial Cave were repatriated in 2009, there are two teeth and one small bone that were overlooked during repatriation, as well as the associated funerary objects.
